

'The music studio was built here in 1994, people from everywhere have been coming here to record since then' (BJ, Warburton 2010).

Scroll down to listen to music created at the Studio

□

Image: Delrick Holland at work, one of 17 Registered Local Producers Click the links to the left to find out more or below

How the Wilurarra Creative Digital Recording Studio works
Special guest musicians in the studio, from 1994 to present

Recording songs in Ngaanyatjarra and other local languages provides a positive framework for cultural maintenance and communication spanning generations. This ongoing development program builds on song-writing, recording and performing. The hot tracks produced in the music studio continue to be heard at discos, at the pools, at the footy and from car stereos across the Lands. You can hear them, too.

Wilurarra Creative is based in the very first music studio to be built in the Ngaanyatjarra Lands, and we are working to setup other local music recording programs in the region.

Below are some recent tracks, recorded and produced in the Wilurarra Creative Music studio.

The local music producers are mostly Indigenous (Ngaanyatjarra) men and women. A few are Non-Indigenous musicians and guest artists.

{music}images/stories/media/mp3/All/{/music}